Coffin Road is the eighth stand-alone novel by British author, Peter May. A man wakes, washed up on a beach on the isle of Harris in the Outer Hebrides: he doesn't know who he is, where he is, or how he got there, but he has an overpowering feeling of dread about something that has happened.

A man is washed up on a deserted beach on the Hebridean Isle of Harris, barely alive and borderline hypothermic. He has no idea who he is or how he got there. The only clue to his identity is a map tracing a track called the Coffin Road. He does not know where it will lead him, but filled with dread, fear and uncertainty he knows he must follow it.

I have only come across Peter May's books recently and am totally hooked. I started with the Blackhouse trilogy and then moved on to this standalone story (although George Gunn features in this from the aforementioned trilogy as does Fin Macleod who is mentioned in passing).

By the end of the third book I confess to being a little weary, and so I did not read Peter May's subsequent novels. He is now a novelist of international acclaim and I was persuaded by published reviews to read The Coffin Road. I am pleased I did so. It is one of very few books which I have read in a single day.

Peter May's sense of place makes you long to visit Lewis and Harris and discover the real places where the novel is set. Perhaps the most compelling character in Coffin Road is the landscape itself. The novel is well crafted with a very contemporary theme played out against an ancient landscape a device that works brilliantly.
